

Bigger local government is a bad idea

Danah Zoulek and Jeff Gonyo circulated the petitions to have these referendums after she was turned down by the Village Board and Washington County Court in her quest to put a landfill in a residential neighborhood.

When the quarry on her recently purchased property was mined, there were about three houses in the area of the quarry. Now there are at least 46 bordering the restored quarry. Despite yelling at the Board, screaming accusations toward those who objected to her landfill, waving signs during Board meetings, and being escorted out by a Sheriff's deputy for being disruptive, Zoulek continues to press forward. Her lawsuit has cost village residents more than $70,000 to date.

Zoulek claims she is a conservative in her campaign literature. Really, we conservatives want less government, not more. Adding two more positions will raise our taxes and add more bureaucracy to our already-functioning leadership team.

Term limits sound really good, but at the local level they do not work. Cedarburg has had them since the early 1990s. In the early 2000s they had no candidates step forward to fill empty seats. They had to amend the law, again, to allow the incumbent to run. What a silly way to run a government.

Can we really afford term limits or increasing the size of the board? Join us in voting no on both referendums.
